A sweet story about sustainability, surfing, and searching for what really matters... When Erin Spenser inherits her grandmother's beautiful cliff-top property in rural Luna Bay, she knows she has to sell it immediately to fund her ailing mother's heart transplant. When she briefs her grandmother's lawyer, Hamish Bourke, the passionate LandCare volunteer explodes: her grandmother, a dedicated fellow volunteer, would turn in her grave. But Erin has responsibilities that can't be denied — even by an angry, obstructive, strangely attractive lawyer determined to stand in her way. Her grandmother's property is a goldmine for holiday developers and her mother's illness is only getting worse. How can she make Hamish understand that the only way to fix her mother's heart is to break her own?
