"At any given moment, I am holding back a minimum of fourteen wisecracks, seven smartass responses, nine sarcastic comebacks, and three withering replies that might possibly earn me the death penalty in some small countries." A.J. Goode is back with more tales of midlife adventures in small-town Michigan, tackling everything from online dating to finding the right bra. In between, she shares stories about her quirky family and some of the more memorable moments of parenting. There are bats, lots of seagull poop, and a hyperactive chihuahua named Diego, along with Nimrod the cat and a group of old ladies known as "The Amoeba." If you need a "Goode" laugh, you're sure to find a few here. Goode's upbeat stories are all about looking for reasons to laugh in life's everyday disasters and misadventures.
