All his life Brendan has dreamed of finding a super-hero of a boyfriend; big, strong, bold, right off the pages of a comic book. His new neighbor Kerry is the opposite of big and brawny yet Brendan finds himself intrigued. A series of phone calls he shouldn't have overheard has him actively trying to engage the smaller man, wanting to know more about him... and the more he learns, the more Brendan comes to realize what actually makes a hero. As the two become friends and then something more, Brendan learns that strength can come in the most unlikely package and that even he has reserves of inner strength he never thought were there. This is a sweet, inspirational story with a low heat level about trust, love, and what true family really is. Approximately 30k words.
