Grieving for an adulterous wife and fleeing debts, the Dutch tailor John Praester set off on a reck voyage across the seas in 1664. He was never to return.

Three short fragments are all that survives of a longer poem cataloguing this tragic expedition, supposedly written by Praester himself. Reproduced for the first time in a digital format, this edition includes an introduction and annotations from Professor Dale Cull. His expansive commentary helps to tease out some of the inherent obfuscations in the piece, providing an illuminating historical and personal context for this unique document.
