After graduating from college, 23-year-old Brianne Collins returns to Boston to house-sit for her wealthy Aunt Claire. Bri quickly makes new friends in the city, but longs to find love and adventure. One night, a series of strange coincidences lead her to meet two young men who both need her help. As she embarks on a curious journey to rediscover the mysteries of her fantastical childhood in the New England countryside, Bri learns that the love and adventure she hoped to find have been waiting for her right in her back yard. Mark is swarthy and confident, with the muscular arms of a carpenter and the disposition of the everyday boy-next-door. But when he reappears in Bri's life after years of distance, she is surprised by his willingness to accept the unexplainable. Then Bri meets the dark and solemn Aeron: with a mysterious past, he's determined to solve the puzzle that could lead him to the homeland he never knew. Seeking information about his mother, Aeron must ask Bri for her help. When Bri retraces the steps she took as a child, she finds herself caught between forces of love and transformation. Will she and Mark be able to save the forest that could show Aeron the way home? Will Bri be able to keep the love of her life? Sometimes it's hard to find a home for love...
